Bones provide a strong framework for the body in addition to supporting normal, healthy movement. Strong bones have a specific density or mass designed to support the weight of the other tissues as well as facilitate normal motions and physical activity.

With the continued and growing emphasis on sustainability in construction we could be on the verge of a radical shift in how we think about the current stock of buildings. The time may be coming when we stop planning for building replacement, and instead plan for building reuse. That in turn would significantly change the roles of designers and builders.
